County tries to point MapQuest in right direction

LAURA HENDRICK

Staff Reporter

First-time visitors to Haliburton County sometimes find the journey more rattling than an inner-city traffic jam. It's not that they don't appreciate the scenery; it's simply a matter of inaccurate directions.

GPS-based mapping systems such as Google Maps and MapQuest have long positioned Haliburton addresses around Trapper's Trail, a winding cottage road east of Haliburton village. When visitors prepare to trek to the Highlands with their trusty Internet directions in hand, they often head straight into an area where, anxious to phone their destination for help, they discover that they have no cell-phone service. They're lost in more ways than one.

Willow Beach Resort owner Marie Gage says the experience often leaves her guests in a panic.

Dirt bike accident injures riders

MATT JAMES

Staff Reporter

A 16-year-old youth has been airlifted to Kingston with head injuries after a head-on dirt bike collision in Harcourt on July 30.

The other rider in the accident, who is believed to be a 10-year-old boy, was taken by ambulance to the Bancroft Hospital. The extent of his injuries is not yet known.

Eighteen-year-old Trevor Smiley was riding a third dirt bike with the two boys when the accident happened on a trail on the hill behind the community centre.

He says the three boys were riding together when the youngest veered onto another trail. The two older boys went to see if new jumps farther up the trail were ready.

After a short time Smiley said he and his friend headed back down the trail to find the 10-year-old, who unbeknownst to them, was already heading northbound.

Bernie Bain gets roasted

After 30 years, Legion bartender gets sent off in flood of laughter

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

MARTHA PERKINS/ECHO

It's two o'clock on a Friday afternoon and it's impossible to get a serious answer from the group of people sitting around a table in the Haliburton Legion's club room.

The question is simple enough: Why will Bernie Bain be missed when he retires after 30 years as the Legion's bartender?

It seems that the group of regulars is more intent on preparing some of the best lines for Bain's sold-out retirement roast the next night.

What makes him a good bartender? "We've never found out," says Doug Wood.

Why do you like Bernie? "He married Sharan; she's nice," says Jim Tice.

"His mother makes good butter tarts; that's nice," says Michael Brodhagen.

It's not until Ann McKay joins them at the table that the truth gets told.

"They torment him all the time," she says, "but they don't know what they'll do without him. There are times we'd try the patience of a saint but he put up with us. You couldn't say anything bad about him."

"Hey, we really do love him," Norm

Friday afternoon was Bernie Bain's last day of work as the Haliburton Legion's bartender. When he started 30 years ago, a beer cost about a dollar, there was a separate room for women and escorts and the bar closed between six and seven so patrons could go home for dinner.

Greenfield says, to which Tice quickly retorts, "Don't tell him that."

But the truth is out: no matter how much of a ribbing Bain would take at his retirement dinner, it will seem strange not to see him standing behind the bar.

"He's like one of the family," Carla Watson says. "He's part of the Legion. Hey, we've been through a lot together."

Bernie Bain had worked at Haliburton Lumber and a sawmill when he decided to apply to be the Legion's bartender, never expecting it to be a 30-year commitment. "It was a job that was up for grabs," he says.

In those days, beer cost about a dollar a bottle, there was a separate room for women and escorts and no one thought that smoking in a bar was a social crime. "We used to have to shut down between six and seven so the men would go home for dinner," he reminisces.

As the son of a Second World War vet and British war bride, Bain felt a special affinity for the Legion. Other people might think of the Legion as a cheap watering hole but he felt differently. "My dad was in the war and I appreciate being here because of him and people like him."

"It makes you feel proud on November 11. It's a proud day for you and they make you feel proud."

With no stools lining the other side of the bar, Bain never had to deal with the stereotype of someone pouring their troubles to the bartender while the bartender poured them another bourbon. Instead, he delighted in the people he'd met, both the patrons from the area and those who were here for special events or summer weekends. "I love meeting different people," he says. "It's friendly and it's nice to talk about different things."

Another perk is that when the Ladies Auxiliary is catering to a function upstairs, one of the ladies always brings a plate for him to enjoy downstairs.

Over the past few years, however, much has changed at the Legion bar.

Drinking and driving rules have reduced the number of patrons, as has the ban on cigarette smoking. He is now legally responsible if he sells alcohol to someone who is impaired. This has forced him to get tough with some of his patrons, people who are also his friends. They might be mad with him at the time but they always see his point of view the next day.

Bain is not criticizing the changes - he hasn't had a drink in 25 years and he's never smoked - but he does say that they've changed the atmosphere in the bar.

Even though he's retiring, people won't have to say goodbye for long. In essence, Bain is trading positions with the bar's part-time bartender, Diane Greavette. She'll be hired full-time and he'll fill in when she can't be there.

Apart from that, he's looking forward to spending more time enjoying his hobbies such as fishing and golf. And all the teasing aside, "I've enjoyed it, I really have," he says. "The Legion has treated me so well."

People asked to keep eye out for silver Honda Civic

The 47-year-old Toronto man was last seen by his family on June 26. He said he was going to the family's cottage on Puffer Island on Lake Kashagawigamog. There are signs that he spent the night there but he hasn't been heard from since.

The Puffers have done everything they can to find him. "We've covered all the roads but we can't cover all the logging roads and access roads," says Bob's brother John. "We're at our wits' end. The only thing that the police can do is wait until fall [to send out a search helicopter]."

Bob drives a 2005 silver two-door

Honda Civic licence # 161 YYV. The kayak is teal green and made by Clearwater Design. Family believe that both his car and kayak are most likely near the family cottage at the south end of Lake Kashagawigamog.

Hydro learns from last year's tornadoes

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

Last August's tornadoes put Hydro One's resources to the test.

But not only did the electricity supplier pass the test with flying colours, it benefited from its experiences.

"If we get hit again, we've learned a lot of what we could do better," says Bill Smeaton, customer operations manager for this region.

For instance, he's already established places throughout the Highlands where trucks and equipment could be stored during the emergency response. He's worked with the county's emergency response commitment to improve lines of communication and establish responsibilities.

And instead of trying to deploy resources from one site, he says HydroOne would "break the storm into multiple sites."

Although Smeaton doubts that the Highlands will soon be hit by a storm like the one that smashed its way through the county on August 2, 2006, he believes that the resulting power outage will not last as long.

As well as all the operational changes that have been made, HydroOne has invested hundreds of thousands of dollars over the past year to improve its infrastructure. Old equipment has been replaced and some of the major lines have been taken out of the forest, where they're harder to reach, and placed along open routes of travel.

"People wonder why the main lines have to be moved from being tucked away in the bush to the main routes, but it's the time it takes to reach those lines if a tree falls on them," he says.

It took a few months but HydroOne has cleared up all of the trouble spots caused by the tornadoes. What made the job so onerous was how widespread the damage was. At least three tornadoes swept through the Highlands and even where there weren't tornadoes, there were ferocious winds. Thousands of people were without power and it took more than a week to restore electricity to all parts of the Highlands.

Crews from across Ontario converged in Haliburton and Smeaton is proud to note that all of them volunteered to be there. Crews ended their holidays early and abandoned their own plans for the holiday weekend in order to help. (Under union rules, if HydroOne has to ask crews to an area, the crews have to be paid a premium amount. If the crews volunteer, they get paid the regular overtime amount.)

"Storms put people in a different frame of mind," Smeaton says. Helping to restore power when lines are down and poles are broken "is what we're supposed to do. The crews just love to do it. It's the fact that you're helping out all these people in need."

"The gratitude we got from people was unbelievable."

It wasn't only the people of the Highlands who showed their gratitude.

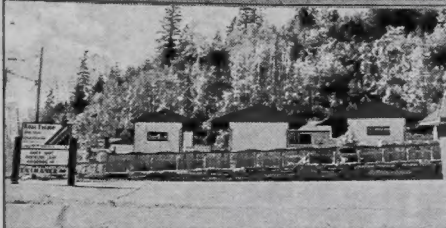

Earlier this year, HydroOne Networks was presented with the annual Emergency Recovery Award from the Edison Electric Institute.

"HydroOne employees showed incredible resilience and persistence in the face of these terrible storms," said EEI president Thomas Kuhn. "Their effort is an inspiration to the rest of our industry, and yet again shows the dedication of our industry to get electricity restored in the face of massive weather-related power outages."

Dysart throws out plan to force use of clear garbage bags

GREG HOEKSTRA

Staff Reporter

Dysart et al is trashing its plan to enforce the use of clear garbage bags this fall.

Earlier this year the township announced that it would be mandating the use of clear bags as of September 1, but in recent weeks council has decided not to push forward with the bylaw's enforcement since recycling initiatives at Dysart's landfills have been extremely successful in recent months.

"For now we'll encourage their use but we won't hammer people by enforcing it," says Reeve Murray Fearrey. "People are already coming to the table here in an effort to do the right thing, so we've decided to focus on getting people to do the right things for the right reasons, not trying to enforce bylaws on them."

Fearrey says the municipality also felt that mandating clear bags was unfair to residents and cottagers since they are more expensive than darker coloured garbage bags. In addition, Fearrey says the clear bags are virgin plastic (or not made out of recycled products) which council felt "kind of flies in the face of the whole point of recycling."

Though the clear bag bylaw will not be enforced, Fearrey says it will also not be rescinded. Instead, the bylaw will remain on the books and may one day be enforced if there are changes in the way clear bags are made, if their price is made more affordable, or if council feels it's necessary.

The clear bag bylaw was meant to allow landfill attendants to see the contents of landfill users' garbage and monitor for recyclable materials. However, in recent months recycling has been on the rise, which Fearrey chalks up to public education and the fact that landfill attendants are now interacting more with users at the recycling bins and landfill face.

"It just continues to get better and better. We've gone from being one of the worst in the area to being one of the best," he says.

Pilot project

In addition to encouraging clear bags for garbage use, Dysart has also introduced a pilot project for collecting plastic

Right now plastic bags cannot be recycled. Dysart hopes that by separating them from other materials, it can bale and store them until a recycling method can be found.

then sending them right back into the landfill," he says. "Contamination is something that we have to address, because it costs everybody; it slows down the whole process."

Other common contaminants, says Bozec, include milk cartons in the plastic bin (they belong with paper) and corrugated cardboard (which includes most pizza boxes) that end up in the paper bin.

In order to collect plastic bags, Dysart has added a third container at the Haliburton landfill's recycling area. The municipality then plans to collect and bale the bags in hopes that a market will eventually open up for such products.

Of course, Bozec also notes that the initiative is simply a pilot project at this point, so whether the new bin will become a permanent fixture at the landfill will remain to be seen.

"We're going to see how easy it is to handle, how easy it is to bale, then make recommendations from there. We'll also have to take into consideration any complaints, and how well the pilot project is being received."

Results from the first few weeks of the project will be analyzed over the next week or so and presented during the August meeting of the Waste Management Committee.

From there, Dysart council will have to decide whether to push forward with the initiative or scrap it alongside the clear bag bylaw.

bags of all kinds at the Haliburton landfill.

Bruce Bozec, Haliburton landfill attendant and member of the municipality's Waste Management Committee, says the program is an effort to get "dirty" or "contaminated" plastics – such as shopping bags and shrink wrap – out of the general recycling bins, since there is little to no market for such plastic at this time.

As a result, the project could potentially save Dysart taxpayers money by lessening the amount of contamination that has to be removed by sorters at Muskoka Containerized Services in Bracebridge.

"From my understanding, what's been happening in Bracebridge is that they were pulling the bags out, bailing them,

The tornadoes of '06

THERE WILL BE MANY STORIES told over the next few days about the powerful fury of nature. People will talk about how quickly the huge storm that spawned at least three tornadoes took shape last August 2. They will marvel also at the speed with which the storm departed, leaving a tangled mess of downed trees and hydro lines, smashed vehicles and beating hearts.

And, after people talk about the storm, they'll share stories about how they coped with the resulting power outage. For some the inconvenience lasted only one very long day. Days stretched into a week for others who had to expend much more energy on the simple

martha perkins

tasks of daily living. Never had being able to turn on a tap, or a light, been more appreciated than it was when, neighbourhood by neighbourhood, the power was restored.

But the funny thing will be the spirit in which people share these stories. There will be much laughter and very few tears. A sense of pride and thanksgiving will infuse the conversation. Although the storm had very dramatic results, it also exposed a tremendous sense of spirit in the Highlands. Neighbours helped neighbours clear trees and pile brush. When one tired, another was there to feed them. People who usually come to the cottage to get away from it all found themselves holding road clean-up days, coming together to make the best of a bad situation. Friends and family members from away arrived with chainsaws and barbecues.

Despite the major inconveniences the storm created, there were very few personal injuries. No lives were lost, no families shattered like all the broken glass where trees fell against building. The only lingering sadness is over the destruction of our forests. The sight of all those downed trees, many of which still lie scattered on our roadsides today, can break your heart. Those trees were our friends, our comfort, our refuge and, in half an hour, they were broken and tossed aside by the ferocious winds. There are wide open spaces where once there was welcoming shade.

In this week's Echo you will read of artisans who turned chaos into beauty. HydroOne will take pride in its response to the storm, and the award it won because of it. Cottage Times has a story about the wonderful new canopy tour at Haliburton Forest, where the old Walk in the Clouds became a tangle of wood and rope on the forest floor after the tornado. There are hundreds more stories that haven't been told about people rebuilding their lives, and replanting their trees. They won't be told in the pages of the Echo, but they will be shared as people get together for the big bash of summer, the August civic holiday weekend.

The tornadoes of August 2, 2006 gave us much to mourn, and much to cope with. It's to our credit that they weren't allowed to take away the spirit of the Highlands.

Polar bears

THIS FALL, I'm slated to travel to the James Bay frontier where a group of us will hunt for grouse and geese and fish for trout. As you can imagine, I'm very excited.

First, I'll be in new country, experiencing the majesty of a truly wild and trackless landscape. But even more thrilling will be the strange animals I'll become acquainted with – polar bears being the most exciting of these. The tourism operator who is arranging our trip says that we'll be camping in an area where the big white bears gather before taking to the ice.

"I hope this doesn't bother you," she said, "but there will be plenty of polar bears in the vicinity."

The truth is it doesn't bother me at all. We'll be armed with shotguns at all times and we've also been put under the care of two guides who'll carry rifles and have a wealth of polar bear experience.

On the other hand, one member of our party is deathly afraid of bears. All he has to do is catch glimpse of a black bear and he's off like a marble in a slingshot. Of course, polar bears are even worse. They provide any sane person with ample reason for fear – they're one of the few animals that will actively stalk man and they're known for just showing up.

Apparently, they'll come from miles away to investigate the mere scent of food. So this ought to be even worse for our friend. It'll take everything he's got to keep it together.

Obviously, this scenario is literally a gold mine for an outdoors humourist such as myself. That's why I've been practising my polar bear growls ever since I heard that we'd be camping among them.

Of course, I know it's not right to growl behind a nervous bird hunter who is white-knuckling a shotgun. That's why I'll wait until he's asleep.

And, every now and then, I plan on screaming and then breaking out in a panicked sprint. Trust me, it'll be funny. He might not laugh right at the moment, but when his heart restarts, watch out.

But even I know that there are larger, more ethical questions to entertain. Would it be so wrong to place sardines in his sleeping bag, for instance?

Interestingly, one territorial government website provides specific advice on what to do should a person have a close encounter with a polar bear.

Here are the basic rules: if you cross paths with a wandering bear, don't run. If the bear is a curious one, don't run. If the bear has been surprised, whatever you do, don't run. If the bear is aggressive, don't run. And lastly, if the bear is predatory, don't run. It just pisses them off.

I told this to my buddy, too. And though my friend is terrified of bears and not really keen on my teasing, I think he actually appreciated the advice. Why else would he have sent me a new pair of running shoes?

Some enchanted evening

A SLOW SUNSET BATHED the world in gold and pink as John rounded the corner on his way home. Smarty his dog tugged at the leash in all the familiar places, wanting to sniff out new smells and raise his leg here and there. There was one particular down

spot directly across from a usually barking dog where Smarty liked to linger especially long while the noisy retriever just about tore off the side of the house watching him.

But tonight John was not in the mood for this canine cacophony, jerking the leash to keep Smarty moving. As he walked, John tried to forget about all that was buzzing in his head - like flies around manure- and soak up the warm summer evening instead. Windows and doors had been flung open as people invited cooler air inside. The heat of the day had left them soft and lazy. They sat in their back yards or front porches, not putting much effort into anything.

John waved to a few neighbours but did not stop. Then he heard voices and looked around, curious to find the source. Two people, almost a block away, were walking in his direction. As they came closer, John was able to make out it was a male and female, probably in their mid or late teens.

To John it was apparent they were a couple on a date, perhaps a first date. The young woman held herself erect, her long hair carefully brushed and swinging gently against her back with every step. She looked straight ahead, her face composed in a set expression of cautious unease. The only part of her that was really moving was her hair as she placed one foot carefully in front of the other, not wanting any missteps.

The young man had that all-cleaned-up-for-a-date look as well. There was a trace of dampness to his thick hair that he had tried to tame with only partial success. He kept shortening his stride so as not to outpace his companion. When they came even with John he gave a small nod and murmured a greeting, which they returned shyly.

After a minute or two, so as not to be obvious, John stopped and looked back at the two as they proceeded toward downtown. The male kept turning to look at his date who walked with her eyes fixed straight ahead. That was how John knew they liked each other. It was so obvious they were both nervous and unsure of how to act in each other's company; she coiled up tighter than a piano string and he continuously trying to read her face.

A smile nudged John's mouth as he watched them walk away. Sally McNeil's face floated before him as he recalled that feeling of hope, fear and excitement mixed together like melted ice cream on his cottage dock. Sally had been all he could think of that summer he turned seventeen and when she kissed him after the bonfire, he knew he would remember the moment forever. That kiss had made up for the hours of nervous uncertainty. All evening he had second-guessed everything he did and said to Sally, wondering if he sounded like a jerk, a loser. The kiss had turned it into an enchanted evening full of promise.

The young couple had disappeared, their receding shapes merging with the darkness that had descended before John had noticed. Feeling more mellow than when he had started out, he allowed Sparky to stop by a fence post for a good long sniff. John wondered what Sally McNeil was up to these days.

More MNR delays

To the Editor:

Can we assume from his letter of July 24 that Craig Dodds is now the third area supervisor for the Ministry of Natural Resource in Minden since the application process for the first-ever permanent asphalt plant on Crown land in Ontario began over two years ago?

Regrettably the taxpayer, as usual, will bear the burden for this protracted process and also the expense of what is becoming a bureaucratic shuffle assigned to the dossier. The Irondale River Protection Association (IRPA) was born out of the frustration of the many citizens who individually have experienced a less than forthright response to their questions and concerns from the MNR, including Minister David Ramsay, during the years of reviewing this application. To that end, IRPA and its many public supporters, have adopted this as their mission statement: "As stewards of our earth's environment we call upon government to declare that no asphalt manufacturing facilities be installed upon the wetlands, source water, and headwaters of natural drainage basins." This statement clearly focuses on the primary issue at the Bark Lake quarry site and goes significantly

Angels in our midst

To the Editor:

We have recently moved a relative to Extendicare in Haliburton. It has been such a comfort to the family to know she is in such good hands. Each and every one of the staff is so unfailingly kind and patient with the residents. The atmosphere is so warm and inviting. It truly feels like a little piece of home for our older relatives. All of the staff including the kitchen, laundry, care-givers, nurses, office employees, is consistently helpful and encouraging to each other, the residents and visitors to the facility.

The recent "Christmas in July" family picnic was just one more example of the extent to which they are willing to go to create a cohesive and environment. It is so heart-warming to have these fine examples of dedicated individuals caring for our loved ones. Thank you to each and every one of you.

Show HART some heart by helping it help stray cats and dogs

To the Editor:

The Highland Animal Relief Team (HART) has supported care for lost, injured and abandoned dogs and cats to callers from Madawaska Valley, Wilberforce, Bancroft, Tory Hill, Haliburton since 1995.

It is generally perceived that HART is a Bancroft organization, serving only Bancroft, but nothing could be further from the truth.

The organization was formed in 1995 by a group of Bancroft businessmen, including Faraday Animal Hospital. Since then word of our rescue service has spread, and we now service 13 municipalities.

HART now works routinely with Faraday Animal Hospital in Bancroft as well as Haliburton Vet Services and even Minden Animal Hospital. Algonquin East Vet Services has been approached to further develop our vet resources. Our volunteers and foster caregivers live in West Guildford, Wilberforce, Haliburton, Barry's Bay, Combermere, Palmer's Rapids, Maynooth, Bancroft, Lake St. Peter, MacArthur's Mills, Cardiff, Coehill and beyond.

A 200 per month "call volume" is answered daily, providing resources for cat/dog care from all of the above towns and many more also.

Traditionally fundraising has occurred in Bancroft only, as the majority of HART volunteers lived there. This is no longer the case and it is incumbent upon HART to develop funds from the "entire" community it serves.

Everyone knows HART is the number to call when looking for rescue services. Many municipalities continue to ignore the impact of our tax-dollar-saving volunteerism, with only limited support from five municipalities to our secondary spay/neuter incentive program to date. Since 2005, SNIP has offered subsidized first vacs/spay/neuter to animals of low- or fixed-income families, unable to afford basic vet care.

In 2005, more than 200 dogs and cats benefitted from this low cost vet care. In 2006, 190 dogs and cats were provided this subsidy. Eighty-six dogs and cats have already been approved since January 2007.

Funds to create this valuable program were initially donated by International Fund for Animal Welfare and Pet Smart Charities for 2005 and 2006. Sustaining funds were to be solicited from the municipalities served.

Please help. Our statistics, expenses are a matter of record that cannot be denied.

beyond the blinkered position of the bureaucrats who would reduce it to merely following process under the Aggregate Resources Act.

The MNR's recent conversion to a policy of "...an open and transparent process..." (while welcomed) nonetheless confirms MNR's lack of forthrightness in the past. Suddenly, Mr. Dodds reveals some seven studies related to this disaster waiting to happen.

Surely, Mr. Dodds and the MNR are familiar with aims and objectives of the Provincial Clean Water Act (i.e. to protect our source water!) Likewise, at issue at this location is the Endangered Species Protection Act which the provincial government recently strengthened to become the "gold standard" for species protection.

With respect to our letter of July 17, , what does Mr. Dodds specifically deem to be "...not accurate..." given our experience with the MNR on this issue in the past?

Mr. Dodds, like his predecessors, direct inquiries to Gary Clements, senior lands technician at MNR Minden. Mr. Clements, in an e-mail response dated Jan. 12, 2007, was unable to confirm whether the application was for a permanent type of asphalt plant because it was apparently not even noted on the Beamish application. And yet, the MNR application review process stumbles on.

Let us keep more water, TSW panel told

LAURA HENDRICK

Staff Reporter

The people of Haliburton have had their chance to speak up about drastically changing water levels. Last Saturday, the Trent-Severn Waterway panel came to Dysart et al arena to hear the concerns of local property owners first hand.

The independent panel consists of six people whose backgrounds range from Trent University professors to land planners, including Haliburton surveyor Greg Bishop, a former member of the Ontario Municipal Board. Over the next few months, they are travelling to communities affected by the waterway system before submitting a formal review on the canal and its mandate.

Many of those people sitting on reservoir lakes in Haliburton County are now facing mudflats where water lapped against the shoreline in June. This review offers a rare chance to modify the system that has left local residents sporadically high and dry for more than a century.

In his presentation to the panel, Kennisis Lake Cottage Owners' Association director, Dr. Chris Riddle, described how the problem appears to be worsening each year.

"The levels are quite unpredictable," he said. "We're about 33 inches below normal. We're now where we would expect to be in mid-August. That means that September is not going to be a very pretty picture for us; a lot of mudflats when we go to reach our boats."

He also gave the results of a lake survey. The questionnaire showed that property and business owners alike crave safe navigation, accessibility to water, and better communication about water levels.

Panel member Douglas Downey was surprised to learn that residents are not informed each time water is drawn from their lakes. "What I'm hearing you say is that there is no communication system letting you know that the water levels will go down the next day."

The room of about 50 people gave boisterous confirmation.

At the heart of Riddle's presentation was the request to be treated as an equally valued member of the waterway. He said that safe navigation on reservoir lakes should be just as important as it is on the TSW system.

Other presenters, such as Dave Pearce, a waterfront owner in the county, simply asked for more justification behind a rock solid waterway mandate. Established at a time when reservoir lakes were largely barren of residents, the mandate ensures a 6-foot depth along the canal at the expense of the reservoir lakes.

"I don't understand why there is a 6-foot guarantee. Why isn't it 5-foot 8-inches? Can anybody tell me?" he asked. Pearce noted that the outdated mandate ignored the thousands of residents affected by water levels upstream. "The mandate should be reviewed every few years to see if it still serves the needs of the people it serves."

The panel listened to the presentations with attentive nods but little feedback. After Pearce's presentation, Downey said, "There is some data being collected. It's happening simultaneously. We will be sharing it with the public as soon as we have it."

Six presentations were made, followed by open-floor discussion. The meeting had been scheduled to allow for much more public input. It was slated to run up to five hours but wrapped up after just two-and-a-half.

Still, the presentations effectively covered a wide range of concerns. Peter Brogden of the Haliburton Hiking festival described how difficult it was to plan an upcoming hike out to a waterfall when he cannot predict if the water will be running or not.

Bonnie Fleischaker, president of the Coalition for Equitable Water Flow said it was time to stop wasting water. Her demand was reinforced through a presentation by Environment Haliburton.

"It is obvious to me as an individual that there is tremendous waste of the natural resource especially in the Haliburton sector. I want that to stop. I want that to stop tomorrow," she said.

Area residents will get another chance to speak out when the panel comes to Minden on August 14. The panel will submit their review by December.

“We’re now where we would expect to be in mid-August. That means that September is not going to be a very pretty picture for us.”
Chris Riddle, Kennisis Lake

BEAR WISE

Keep bears out of your neighbourhood.

Bears thrive in the wild on berries and nuts, but when their natural food supply runs low, bears will venture out to residential areas. Drawn by the smell of other foods and garbage, bears will follow their noses – right to your neighbourhood. Once they find a source of easy food, they will come back again and again.

You can help keep bears out of your neighbourhood. Here's what you can do:

Garbage

- ☐ Put garbage out on the morning of garbage day, and not the night before
- ☐ Store indoors until morning of pick up or trip to the dump
- ☐ Keep meat scraps in the freezer until garbage day
- ☐ Place garbage in containers that have tight fitting lids
- ☐ If eating outdoors, put wrappers and scraps in the garbage, not on the ground
- ☐ Frequently clean garbage and recycle containers

Bird feed (including seed, nectar and suet)

- ☐ Feed birds during winter months only

Fruits and vegetables

- ☐ Avoid landscaping with trees, shrubs or plants that produce foods known to attract bears (some examples include crab apple trees, mountain ash, beech, and oak)
- ☐ Remove vegetables and fallen fruit from the ground
- ☐ Pick all ripe fruit from trees and bushes

In an immediate emergency call your local police or 911. To report bear problems call:

Global warming threatens lake trout

Will have adverse effect on warm water species such as bass and pike

BRYN WEESE

Special to The Echo

Global warming – whether the result of industry far away, nature's own course or a combination of the two – will have serious implications on lake trout in the Highlands. Specifically, as lake temperatures continue to rise, there won't be any lake trout left.

This message came from Dr. John Casselman, adjunct professor with Queen's University and a Senior Scientist Emeritus with the Ministry of Natural Resources at a Lakeland Conference in Buckhorn.

The topic was climate change and, while many speakers spoke at large about the changing climate and its effect on weather patterns across the world and the implications for the future,

Casselman brought the warning closer to home.

Casselman, a leading expert in otolith (ear bone) ageing of fish, has also been heavily involved in studies in Lake

Ontario for many years. Data collected in the Bay of Quinte by the Glanora Fish Station, the records of which date back 50 years show that the water in the Bay has been heating up since 1972. December water temperatures have increased an average of 1.2° Celsius since then, with last year's average temperature 4.2° warmer than normal.

Will anglers still have the opportunity to catch record-setting lake trout in Highlands waters? A Ministry of Natural Resources scientist warns that as lakes get warmer, lake trout will die off. Anglers will have to put their lines in farther north.

1° temperature rise = 1.5 times fewer lake trout

result in premature hatches [of the eggs]," Casselman said.

"And fry survival at emergence [in the spring] is negatively related to water temperatures during spawning [in the fall]; the warmer the water, the less lake trout survive."

Given that the optimum spawning temperature for Lake trout is 1°, the heating of lakes is a concern, given all the evidence to support global warming. In fact, an increase of one degree Celsius will result in 1.5 times fewer lake trout. A two degree increase in overall water temperatures would result in 2.5 times fewer lake trout, and to break the trend and cross the threshold, an increase of three degrees in water temperature would result in 20 times fewer Lake trout. At 13° Celsius during the fall spawn, Casselman's research shows that no Lake trout hatches would survive.

As he explains, the reason for this is because Lake trout eggs, which incubate during the winter, begin developing too fast in warm water. This results in early hatches before the ice cover recedes in the spring. Once the juvenile lake trout absorb their yolk-sacs (a process that takes six weeks), the lakes must have already "turned-over" so that the juveniles can descend to deep water, usually deeper than 100 feet, where they feed and grow. But, he stresses, there must not only be cold water but also enough oxygen at their preferred depths for them to survive.

In the average lake in the Canadian Shield, Casselman says only about five per cent of the lake is suitable habitat for juvenile lake trout. In addition to cottage development, which inevitably means more phosphates in the lake and depleted oxygen, warmer water means a loss of that already limited habitat. For this reason, lake trout here are vulnerable to global warming.

However, Casselman is not all doom and gloom. He stresses that where lake trout may cease to exist in the southern extreme of their range, more suitable conditions will be created further north, where currently it is too cold.

Likewise, warm water species such as bass and pike will find the warmer waters of the Canadian Shield more hospitable and their populations will strengthen. For example, the optimal spawning temperature for smallmouth bass is 18° Celsius.

Additionally, if and when current lake trout fisheries resources become a thing of the past in the south, there will be an opportunity for stocking programs to introduce new angling opportunities.

"I used to be one of the purists who was against stocking and in favour of encouraging natural recruitment [natural population reproduction]," he says. "But if you're not getting natural recruitment, use stocking to create a fish resource of some kind to use [what was once] cold water habitat."

In addition to losing lake trout from the Canadian Shield, warmer water temperatures will also mean more favourable conditions for invasive species, such as pike and rock bass.

"There will be more rock bass with global warming, there is no doubt about it," he says.

Casselman says that lake trout are particularly vulnerable to rock bass in the south and pike in the north. Both compete with lake trout for food and both favour warmer water temperatures so will be at an advantage with global warming trends of water temperatures.

As to whether lake trout will be able to adapt, or evolve to suit the changing water temperatures, Casselman says that is unlikely. Given the rate at which temperatures are warming and the correlated increase in competition for resources, the Lake trout would have to adapt to too many things all at once.

And for those who would argue that their lake is fine and somehow immune from this problem because it is deep and cold, Casselman says that, in fact, really deep lakes with a relatively small surface area are in fact more susceptible to having too warm a water temperature during the fall spawn.

"Deep lakes have a thermal inertia and they hold heat," he says. "Although they take longer to heat up, they have to have the surface area to cool quickly [or else the water temperature during the fall will be too warm]."

The problem that Casselman foresees in the near future isn't necessarily the fate of the species in central Ontario, but rather the task of managing the important fisheries that the fish provide.

"The challenge is how to manage lake trout populations in changing environments," he says. "The environment is changing and we are trying to manage [the fisheries] based on data from the past but it's a moving target we're trying to hit."

Bryn Weese is a former reporter with the Minden Times. He now works at the North Bay Nugget.

"We are trying to manage the fisheries on data from the past but it's a moving target we're trying to hit."

Discovering the ecology of Haliburton County

Young participants learn the importance of healthy shorelines in Highlands

Atop the major water shed which leads to Lake Ontario or Georgian Bay sits Pine Lake in West Guilford. It is fitting that Life on the Edge, a Discovery Day about the importance of shorelines, should be held at the West Guilford Community Centre last Wednesday, July 25.

"Shoreline areas in the Haliburton Highlands are more natural-looking and much less developed than shorelines in the City of Kawartha Lakes and Muskoka," said Barrie Martin of Out to Learn at the Discovery Day on Wednesday. It is therefore important to educate the public about how to keep them that way. The Haliburton Highlands Stewardship Council has partnered with Out to Learn to develop family-oriented Discovery Days this summer. Discovery Days are held every Wednesday at various locations throughout Haliburton County. The most recent Discovery Day, Life on the Edge, was about the importance of riparian areas (where land and water meet) to the ecology of Haliburton County.

"Shorelines are dynamic ecosystems," says Barb Elliot, ecology instructor at Sir Sandford Fleming College in Lindsay. Did you know that the water levels regularly and naturally change in the Great Lakes? Did you know that moisture-loving plants live on shorelines and absorb water like sponges? Intact shoreline ecosystems provide important habitats for species that can survive nowhere else. In addition they secure the shoreline and prevent erosion. Shoreline ecosystems naturally purify water. Some shoreline plants can even efficiently remove PCB's (polychlorinated biphenyls from refrigerators and air conditioners) from water better than any modern technique we have discovered!

At Life on the Edge curious local residents and cottagers of all ages collected samples of water from Pine Lake and looked at it under a microscope to determine what type of microscopic invertebrates are living in Pine Lake. Even before the samples were placed under the microscope, though, many small creatures were visible in the water samples which means Pine Lake is healthy.

A lake with an infestation of zebra mussels would have few microscopic creatures and would be considered unhealthy even though the water looks clean. Next, a few daring participants waded into knee-deep water with a seine net to capture a sample of vertebrates. One pumpkin seed sunfish was the first catch of the day.

Elliot says, "My parents are the ones who introduced me to ecology. I grew up on a farm and spent time in nature since I was four years old. My Grade 5 science teacher, Mr. Hill, also sparked my interest in ecology." Having parents or teachers introduce you to ecology at an early age can foster a heart of stewardship in a child and possibly the next generation.

Three more exciting Discovery Days are scheduled for this summer: Flying Wonders; Geocaching; A GPS Treasure Hunt; and Oh, Bats! Cost for adults is $15, for children $8 and for families $30.

Local students make a good time of filmmaking

GREG HOEKSTRA

Staff Reporter

As a reporter, it's not often that your interview subject puts you under the spotlight of a camera. But that's exactly what happened when I sat down to interview Kelly Mulholland, Adam Cox, and Lukas Stevens – three student filmmakers who collectively for Haliburton's "Good Times Productions."

Sitting at a picnic table in Head Lake Park, the three seem like any other group of teenage friends. They laugh, crack inside jokes, and even poke mild fun at one another. In some ways, it's almost hard to believe that the young trio have filmed more than 50 movies in their short lives, but while other kids were playing basketball or the piano, the members of Good Times Productions were busy capturing their own childhood exploits on film.

As the three remember it, it all began back in Grade 6, when one day Adam invited over both Kelly and Lukas – who barely knew each other at the time – with an inventive idea in mind.

"Adam invited us both over and said 'Guys, we have to make a movie,'" remembers Lukas.

Willing to give it a shot, the other two agreed and the group set to work on their first masterpiece – aptly titled "The Grade 6 Movie" – which poked fun at popular reality TV shows Survivor and Fear Factor as well as the board game Clue.

Since then the group has produced film after film, both serious and lighthearted, and the art of filmmaking has become not just a hobby but a passion for Lukas, who plans to make a living in the world of television broadcasting.

In recent years, the group has made a name for themselves, both amongst their peers at Haliburton Highlands Secondary School and members of the local arts community. Perhaps most notably, the group produced a short music video to accompany the Green Day song "Boulevard of Broken Dreams" which tackled issues of bullying and teen depression. They consider it to be one of their best works to date.

"A whole bunch of people saw it and they thought it was just awesome. I even heard some people cried," says Lukas.

The film also garnered attention from Tammy Rea of the Highlands Media Arts cooperative. After seeing the film, Rea invited Good Times Productions to submit short films to both the Smoke Screens and 48-day filmmaking challenges – an opportunity they jumped on in order to get more exposure in the community outside the high school's walls.

With no formal training in filmmaking or acting, the group has had to pick things up as they go along. In particular, Lukas has taught himself to edit the group's films digitally, and has also taken to directing and filming as much as possible while his cohorts act out the script.

"Since Luke's the main director he usually has small roles and then we kill off his character," laughs Adam.

"That's the solution to everything. If someone has to leave, just kill them, instead of changing the story line," adds Kelly lightheartedly.

Aside from school projects or fun endeavors, Lukas has also been contracted to produce several films for local organizations, including members of the Lakeside Baptist Church and Camp Medeba. Last winter, he also had an opportunity to work with professional camera equipment during a Christian retreat at the Muskoka Woods Sports Resort.

Now a Grade 12 graduate, Lukas says he plans to spend the summer working at Camp Medeba once again before attending Crestwood High School in Peterborough to take specialized video classes and complete a co-op at Cogeco Television. Meanwhile, both Adam and Kelly still have one year to complete at HHSS, so the two plan to focus on their studies before Kelly pursues her career as an English teacher and Adam considers studying criminology. For a while, the two say filmmaking may be put on hold, though Adam says he does often make films during the summer-time when his cousins come up to visit.

Lukas admits that part of him is sad to be leaving behind his childhood friends, but he also feels that leaving the Highlands is something he has to do to pursue his life's dream.

"I have to move on and see if I can get into television broadcasting. I have some pretty good editing skills and filming skills, I just can't come up with very good story plots," he says. "[I like filmmaking because] it's heart pounding when I show a video...I get really nervous and can feel myself getting hot. You just wonder 'are they going to like it?'"

However, he also suggested that next summer he might return to the area, and proposed to his friends on the spot that they consider making a business venture out of their hobby.

"Next summer I was thinking maybe we could open up a small business somewhere, like a little store where people could bring in their video footage," he tells Adam and Kelly. "In Haliburton I've actually had quite a few requests for kayaking videos, snowboarding videos, weddings, and ATV videos," he adds.

Whether that idea actually pans out or not, all three members of Good Times Productions agree that they would still like to continue making movies whenever they are reunited again. For them, it's a long-lasting tradition that has linked them together since childhood, and it's a bond that none of them wish to see broken anytime in the foreseeable future.

"Hopefully it will go on for as long as possible," says Lukas.

From left to right Haliburton Highlands Secondary School students Adam Cox, Kelly Mulholland, and Lukas Stevens make up Good Times Productions, a local filmmaking group that has shot and edited more than 50 projects since they were in Grade 6.

LET'S KEEP HALIBURTON GREEN

MATT JAMES/Echo

BOATsmart! Canada took a tour around Head Lake and Danielle Roach and Cameron Taylor, president and director of marketing brought us up to speed on boat safety and boat licenses.

Safe boating means using a little bit of common sense

MATT JAMES

Staff Reporter

On their way through Haliburton to an antique boat show in Gravenhurst, Cameron Taylor, president and director of marketing at BOATsmart! Canada and his co-worker Danielle Roach stopped at Head Lake for an update on the latest info on boat safety and licenses.

Cruising around Head Lake aboard the Campion Allante 545, Taylor explained that each year approximately 140 to 150 boating fatalities occur, and last year 35 per cent of those incidents involved alcohol. In addition, approximately 85 per cent of last year's drowning incidents were because lifejackets were not worn. Sixty per cent of those could have been prevented if lifejackets had lifejackets been used.

"That's high," said Cameron of the high number of alcohol-related accidents. "There shouldn't be any really. The point of boating is to go out and have fun but you have to make sure that you know what you're doing. Use common sense and you'll have fun."

Taylor, along with the Canadian government, views drinking and boating in the same light as drinking and driving, and with last spring's amendment of Bill 209, impaired boaters will now be fined in the same manner as impaired drivers. The new legislation provides police officers with authority to suspend boating licences for 12 hours and issue a 90-day Administrative Driver's License Suspension (ADLS) if the boat operator registers a failed breath test.

BOATsmart! Canada's mandate is to promote the safe, enjoyable, and environmentally friendly use of Canada's waterways, but they're also the information hub regarding the acquisition of the Pleasure Craft Operator Card, a.k.a. boat licence.

The law requires those born after April 1, 1983 to be licensed in order to operate any powered boat. Those born prior to that who operate a power boat less than four metres (13.1 feet) in length, also require a licence. Failure to present the Pleasure Craft Operating Card upon request of enforcement officers could result in a fine no less than $250.

As for the ski boats that the majority of people use, everyone will need to be licensed by September 15, 2009. While that might be two years away, Taylor encourages people to obtain the one-time licence fee of $50 sooner rather than later, as he said prices are likely to increase.

With cottagers being the organization's main focus they encourage and educate boaters about the rules and regulations of boating and how to use certain pieces of equipment. And in the case of an emergency, to make ensure people know how to react.

Boating is more or less a very safe activity for everyone to enjoy, Mark McMaster from the Marine Unit of the Haliburton Highlands OPP agrees.

"We've had only one boating collision so far this year on Boshkong Lake a couple weekends ago," said McMaster. "The driver was in unfamiliar territory and went up some rocks." He added that alcohol was not involved.

McMaster, who patrols lakes in the Haliburton Highlands, said the main complaint is boats speeding within 30 metres (100 ft) from the shore.

"A lot of it all boils down to common sense and being respectful," he says. "The main thing I'm looking for is that you have lifejackets and that there is no alcohol on board."

Dirt bikes collide on blind corner in Harcourt on Monday

At approximately noon, two of the dirt bikes met on a blind corner of the sandy trail and were unable to avoid each other.

Smiley, who was travelling in third gear at approximately 50-60 kph, was able to avoid the crash by skidding out of the way. But when he stood up he saw that his friends were in need of help.

"He was yelling, 'I'm hurt' or 'It hurts,'" a shaken Smiley said of the elder boy.

After accessing the situation Smiley knew he had to get help and fast. His own bike wouldn't start he grab one of the other bikes involved in the accident and headed towards town where he found 31-year-old Simon Murphy.

"This kid came up to me wild-eyed and said his friends had been in an accident," said Murphy.

Murphy, who runs a bike shop in town and recognized Smiley, reacted instantly

Orange pylons encircle a lone dirt bike just hours after two youths collided head on in Harcourt on July 30. One youth was air lifted to Kingston while the other was rushed to Bancroft hospital.

and ran across the street to the home of former fire chief Don Middleton. Murphy says Middleton called the police while he and Highlands East firefighters went back to the scene.

"The older boy was barely conscious, but we kept him talking," said Murphy. "I heard over the radio that he was suffering from unspecific internal complications."

Though police could not confirm this, a witness said a helicopter may have landed near the scene to transport the more seriously injured youth.

The investigation is on going.

With a background in sales, marketing, purchasing, and accounting, Karen Burnett opened Northern Expressions at the beginning of May. The furniture and home decor store has been well received, and Burnett, who hails from the Niagara region, really enjoys the sense of community of Haliburton. Open year round, Burnett, pictured with associate Stephan Tomiuck, offers a diversity of products such as tables, chairs, lamps, mattresses, pillows, outdoor furniture, and many other home furnishings to suit all tastes. The store is a few doors down from the Beer Store in Haliburton.

Heritage House Café

Nicola Jowett, a life-long Eagle Lake cottager, missed Haliburton so much during her travels as a television host that she decided to open a café and boutique in Haliburton. Heritage Café, in the former Banks Store on Pine Street, is a reflection of some of her epicurean experiences around the world. The café, which is set up with free WiFi, uses free trade coffee beans and is as eco-friendly as possible. The menu specializes in sandwiches, wraps and salads.

Cindys

About 10 years ago Cindy Cox and her husband Earl moved north from the Durham Region to Haliburton where they've been long time cottagers. As owners of Lakeside Golf Course, Cindy decided that she wanted to open her own clothing and accessories store because fashion has always been a passion of hers. Cindy, pictured with her niece, Angela Willing, also an employee, describes her business as fashionable clothing at fair prices. MapQuest a poor guide but they're in the middle of nowhere. They've got no cell service, and they're a good three quarters of an hour past our place," she says from Willow Beach, on the north shore of Lake Kashagawigamog. "The GPS coordinates that MapQuest uses just aren't accurate."

County council is hoping to improve those directions. Last week, it passed a motion to share their public and private roads information with the Ministry of Natural Resources. From there, the information will be part of a database that can be accessed by Internet mapping sites, GPS units, and OnStar systems.

"That will definitely make life incredibly easier because when you live in the city MapQuest is quite accurate. People have really gotten to rely on it and depend on its accuracy," says Amy Brohm, the county's tourism marketing coordinator.

Brohm noticed the problem during her first day on the job. Complaints from local businesses, accommodators in particular, drew her attention to the problem. What Brohm finds especially frustrating is that the websites do not draw a blank in areas lacking information; they instead give detailed directions to the wrong place. "I would almost prefer it said 'I don't know,'" she said.

In the meantime, business owners such as Gage make a point of warning all visitors to beware of mapping sites. Gage puts a statement in bold red letters on her website and on every confirmation notice she sends out that reads: Warning: Do not use MapQuest or any other GPS-based system as they all have wrong location for village of Haliburton and they do not respond to requests to change!!

She and her husband Don are looking forward to taking this message down.

"It would be so nice if the computer directions were accurate. Right now, it's just nuts," said Don. The problem recently popped up again when friends visiting from England tried to use MapQuest to find their way to the Hamilton airport. The directions placed the resort near Kinmount instead of Haliburton.

While the agreement between MNR and the county still has to be signed, planning co-ordinator Jane Tousaw is thrilled to see it moving forward. MNR has requested the information many times in the past but certain clauses made council hesitant to sign an agreement.

"Now we don't have to send the changes every three months," Tousaw says when describing some of the improvements to the agreement.

It will not be difficult for the county to come up with the roads information. A similar service that maps out the streets of the county is already available on the county website.

By putting in a specific address, the GIS map will navigate a person through the Highlands. Unfortunately, the map does not stretch outside of the county and is largely unknown to non-local residents. The new agreement will allow this data to be used as a missing piece of a much larger patchwork of maps.

How to double your money and give it all away

Edward Burtynsky documentary raises money for the Rails End Gallery

Manufactured Landscapes, the highly evocative documentary by award-winning photographer Edward Burtynsky, has raised awareness about how humans have altered the landscape in China. Now it will help raise money for the Rails End Gallery.

The gallery has a very special evening in store on Saturday, August 18. It begins with the screening of the Burtynsky documentar at 7 p.m. at Northern Lights Performing Arts Pavilion followed by an After Party at the gallery surrounded by work by local artist, E.G. Blundell.

The feature film is about the work of prominent Canadian artist and follows his work in China, where the humans have altered the landscape in epic proportion.

"Everyone should see it," says David Suzuki. "Enough about the art," you say, "What was that about doubling my money?"

This is not just another pretty landscape show. What makes this event most important is that every dollar raised will be doubled by the Ontario Arts Foundation. These funds will be spent exclusively on Art in Education programs throughout the county. At the After Party there will be short screening of yet another documentary about another Canadian artist - our very own E.G. Blundell. This short film by Tammy Rea (Highlands Media Arts) will refresh the senses and shed light on the creative process of Blundell, a landscaper painter of another stripe.

Blundell's work is gouged from plywood and painted in luscious colour derived from the artist's intimate knowledge of mined land around Cobalt, Ontario. Tickets for the event are $20 available in Haliburton at The Heritage House Café, The Old Country House, Rails End Gallery & Arts Centre; in West Guilford at The Art Hive; in Tory Hill at the K(nave) Gallery; in Minden at the Agnes Jamieson Gallery.

Meanwhile, Blundell's exhibit, Bloom: new work, opens at the Haliburton gallery on August 4.

A hundred pounds of clay

Harcourt Park families roll up their sleeves to support literacy in Wilberforce

TRUDY POGUE

Special to the Echo

The morning began with Harcourt Park's own Tony Bennett on guitar, Jean Keith on piano and Pat Arber on vocals. They are "The Harcourt Park Trio" and they performed their own rendition of "A Hundred Pounds of Clay." The song was originally recorded by Gene McDaniels and reached #3 on the charts in 1961. The modified lyrics were a fitting introduction to the "Tiles for Literacy" event at the Harcourt Park Community Centre on July 14.

Harcourt Park resident and potter, Charlene McConnell, used a little more than a hundred pounds of the gray stuff (about 120 lbs) to make 102 6"x6" clay tiles. For $10, participants decorated and personalized their tiles and will be able to keep them to use as wall hangings or trivets, or to give away as gifts. The tiles and all materials were generously donated by Charlene and her husband, Rob, so that 100 per cent of the proceeds will go directly to literacy programs at Wilberforce Elementary School.

When all the tiles had been painted, etched and stamped, over $1,000 had been raised. But Charlene's work is not over; each tile now has to be bisque-fired to seal the colour, glazed and then fired again. With 24 hours per firing, Charlene will be fitting the tiles in between her other work in the kiln - work she will be showing at the upcoming Haliburton Art & Craft Show on July 27-29 in Head Lake Park. She also sells her fun and functional pots for home and garden at the new Cushion Cottage Gallery in Wilberforce.

After the musical performance, Charlene gave instructions while the eager artists waited patiently (and some impatiently) to get their hands on the clay, "slip" (i.e. clay paint) and materials. Charlene lifted up a small sponge which, to a potter, is a "smoother outer" and an eraser. She talked about "scraffito" (putting a colorant on the clay and carving through it to the underlying colour) and "insizing" (filling deep grooves with slip and smoothing it out with a potter's rib or credit card). And then they went to work...

Brent and Brooke Zubal, from Ohio, are enjoying their annual summer vacation at their grandparents' cottage. Brooke painted the sun and a fish on her tile while her brother used a maple leaf to create the perfect Canadian souvenir.

"When it's cooked, I'm gonna hang it up in my room at the cottage," says

Cassandra Rose inscribed and decorated her cottage address on her tile: "219 Little Straggle". Mom Cora Rose says they'll hang it outside the cottage as a sign.

Michael Arber, 10, painted on his tile, "a fisherman, a trout biting a lure, clouds and rain and the sun trying to peak through the clouds." It will be a tangible reminder of a great cottage memory: "My papa and I were fishing and it rained on us," he says.

Some tiles included personal messages, like "Happy 50th Birthday" and "Daddy's Girl". There were hand-painted pictures, butterfly and frog imprints, cottage images and leaf prints - lots of outdoor themes, naturally!

Three women sat together at the end of one table, enjoying the opportunity to be creative and chat.

"I figured since my kids wouldn't come, I'd do it instead," says Joan Bennett (wife of Tony). "This has been fun. It's very therapeutic."

Cottage friends Heather Eatson and Roxanne Tidmarsh agreed. Joan plans to keep her tile at the cottage and Roxanne's will be going into her garden.

Valerie Smith, Trillium Lakelands District School Board trustee, was also on hand and purchased her own tile. "I couldn't resist," she says. Her tile will be a reminder of what this event is doing for the local community. On it she inscribed the words, "Sharing the pleasure of reading ... brings families together."

Rob and Charlene McConnell came up with the idea for "Tiles for Literacy" this spring. Three years ago, they made their Harcourt Park cottage their home, and their son Braedin attended Wilberforce Elementary School for two years. Harcourt Park is a private cottage community with approximately 600 lots on eight lakes. In spite of its remoteness, there are several families and retired couples who call this 7,000-acre paradise, "home," and quite a few kids either attend or have attended the school in Wilberforce.

"We wanted to do something together to assist the school," says Rob. Joani Croft, principal of the school, is grateful for this event that will "tie our hamlets together in more ways than one". She says, "Technology has phenomenal applications, but what could be finer than curling up in bed with a good book on a blustery day?"

Haliburton County has its share of blustery days and, thanks to "Tiles for Literacy," there will be more good books to go around. The money raised will be used to purchase books for the school library and to support events such as book fairs.

With a hundred pounds of clay, a hundred tiles for literacy and a whole lot of support for the community, the people of Harcourt Park are giving a gift that will generate a hundred thank yous from the staff and students at Wilberforce Elementary School.

From chaos...

The King family was devastated when one of the August 2, 2006 tornadoes sent this tree crashing down next to their cottage on Halls Lake. But one day, Alison King drove by Paul Rolfe's woodworking studio on Highway 118 and she had an idea: why not make something good come out of the chaos?

... comes beauty

In the months following the tornadoes, Rolfe has been kept very busy turning fallen trees into beloved, and beautiful, bowls.

Tornado can't destroy cottagers' love of Highlands beauty

MATT JAMES

Staff Reporter

ALISON KING HAS BEEN COTTAGING at Halls Lake since she was born. Her parents owned property on the west side of the lake and eventually purchased another property on the east side where King, her husband Brad, and two kids, Thomas, 7, and Ainsley, 4, have been for the past six years. But last year was certainly the most eventful of their time in cottage country, as the Kings witnessed first-hand the fury of Mother Nature.

In the early afternoon of August 2, 2006, Alison and her family, including the family dog Hogan, were invited to an impromptu 54th birthday party for next-door neighbour, John Summer. And like any good birthday celebration, hot dogs, hamburgers and, of course, birthday cake was served.

Nestled in a bay on the lake's east side, a side that always receives a warm and robust westerly wind, the day was hot and most enjoyable, especially for the kids splashing in the shallow waters along a stretch of beach.

Time was meaningless on such an occasion — it was the peak of summer and the Kings' thoughts were as far from the city and work as possible. However, they soon became aware of time as the sky began to darken much earlier than usual.

"Suddenly it started to look a little nasty out there and Brad ordered the kids out of the water," said Alison.

Soon after the kids dried off, the rain began to fall, so the party moved quickly to the rear of Summer's cottage. There, under a large carport, everyone was protected from the rain and the party resumed. But with each passing minute the storm worsened and it was muggy and still — the calm before the storm. The sky was as unique a colour as a speckled trout.

"It was an aqua green sky — you just knew it was not a good sky," says Brad. "The kind of sky that scares you a little bit."

After 20-30 minutes under cover, the wind had picked up and it was then Brad looked toward the lake. His instincts instantly told him to hurry everyone inside.

"I just looked around the side of the cottage and saw

Heartwood

The Haliburton Tornadoes of August 2nd, 2006

by S. A. MCCORMICK

My hands touch the tops of trees never intended to be this close to ground. My heart breaks. A rake of tornadoes scraped the County from west to east

Cherry tree, bleeding from your heart wood, bleeding in the sun that followed the storm. Giant basswoods, pillars holding up the Highlands sky lying down, graceful leaves still reaching to the clouds, roots clinging to soil tight, seeking earth, needing moisture

We cannot lift you up, place you back into your home, the cavernous dark hollow where you lived almost a century, witnessed the clearing of forest around you, and the building of this old farmhouse when you were still a sapling in a grotto.

Today we mourn the trees, who breathed for us, and cleaned the air.

At night, the skyline is different. The majestic form of your giant canopy is missing, horizon forever changed, tree top silhouettes lower now, empty where you all stood clumps of towering basswoods in view of each other.

Now your forms angle above horizontal, reluctant to lie down.

Random forces of nature, perhaps enhanced by man, took you down.

We mourn for you, wonder how, within your view a post propped by two tentative poles still stands straight, its fragile, aging bird house perched on top, and bluebirds fly above.

Today I'm feeling humble for the heart that pumps within me, the blood that flows, the air I breathe, your bright inner flesh, jagged and exposed, roots unearthed, clinging to life

We sit in silence, cry for you, grieve your unexpected loss.

REAL ESTATE UPDATE

PERSONAL TASTE

QUESTION: I inspect a lot of houses because my taste is very particular. This seems to wear out a lot of Realtors. Any advice?

ANSWER: It is not uncommon to have predetermined preferences, especially when it comes to price, style, size, layout and location of your "dream home." However, if these preferences are unreasonable, you could likely reject an abnormal amount of listings and be looking forever.

You can avoid a lot of this stress and effort by sharing your preferences with your Realtor. Let the agent do the pruning and weaning of undesirable properties. Request that you be shown only those listings that meet certain criteria that you have indicated.

CONSERVE a vast amount of time and effort by pre-sharing your preferences with your Realtor.

Lake becomes surreal swirl of water as tornado approaches

By DAVE ALLEN

Since the photo in the July 17th issue of the Echo (Remember the Tornadoes) was of our former cottage, I felt compelled to share our story.

At approximately 8 p.m. on Wed., August 2, 2006, six of us, including two brave youngsters, were just heading next door to the other cottage for a barbecue when our world turned upside down. All of a sudden, gale force winds seemed to come out of nowhere.

As we stared out the windows at an angry Lake Kashagawigamog, the water in our bay became a swirling, greenish mass. It was surreal! Fortunately for us, our neighbour, Stu Timbers, who was in the cottage at the time, took us out of our hypnotic state by yelling at us over the howl of heavy winds to get away from the windows as they were starting to buckle.

No sooner had we done so then three of our treasured 150-year-old giant white pines simultaneously came crashing down on us. The crunching and breaking sounds of everything around us was horrifying.

What seemed to be an eternity only lasted minutes. Fortunately, the structural integrity of our old Viceroy may well have saved our lives.

Needless to say, all of us were in shock for some time afterwards and yet thankful that none of us was injured.

The next morning brought us beautiful sunny skies as we surveyed the devastating damage left in the tornadoes' wake. Before we knew it, a half dozen neighbours showed up with saws to help us clear our roadway of a dozen or more trees so the crane could remove the pines from the building. It took us the better part of that day just to get to the outside world again, thanks to the best neighbours you could ever ask for, which by all reports was pretty much the case throughout Haliburton County. The Volvo station wagon was written off.

See Family Volvo page 9

With seconds to spare, the Allen family retreated from the window of their Lake Kashagawigamog home before a huge white pine came crashing down.

Although the aftermath of the tornado was a struggle because we had no power for five days, we got through it and almost a year later we have a new cabin to show for it!

We are blessed to be living in such a wonderful community. Our only regret is that the matriarch of our family, Valerie Vickery, didn't get to see the end result although she is with us in spirit. Thanks again, neighbours and friends.

that sky," recalled Brad. "I just grabbed the kids and yelled at Alison to get inside. It was just crazy, the sound was incredible."

Poor Hogan the dog was in the King cottage all alone while, huddled in door frames at the Summers' cottage, were 20 or so people, scared and hoping for the best outcome in such a helpless situation. Rain was coming through the windows, soaking the occupants and overhead the horrible snapping sound of trees was heard.

"It was this horrible, horrible sound, like a locomotive almost," says Alison.

As the crow flies, Maple Lake is approximately 10 km southeast of Halls Lake, and that's where Sandra and Dennis Lane have been cottaging since 1969. At their cottage on Fry Lane, just off Norley Rd, they too were enjoying the warm and sunny afternoon on Aug. 2.

Joined by their son, Allan, 44, his new bride, and some friends visiting from Germany, Annette Hoffmocker and her two sons, Felix, 5 and Risto, 3, the group sat down at the dinner table for a feast.

Everyone noticed it was growing dark earlier than normal and that a storm was likely en route, but thunderstorms were part and parcel of the cottaging experience — in fact, what a sight it would be for their visiting guests. Welcome to the Highlands.

"Suddenly I looked across the lake. I saw what appeared to be water — from the surface of the lake right to the sky," said Sandra. "You would have thought it was a tsunami or something.

"And I said, 'Here comes trouble.'"

By the time the words left her mouth, the storm was no longer across the lake.

"There was this big splash against the window," says Allan. "Like you were in a car wash. And then it was boom! Boom! Boom!"

The three booms were trees falling at the front of the cottage. As the tornado tore trees roots from the ground, inside the group was stunned by what was happening around them.

"We were all stupefied because we weren't expecting it," says Sandra.

Suddenly Allan's survival instincts kicked in.

"Everyone away from the window!" he yelled.

But Sandra couldn't resist; a disturbing, yet uncontrollable feeling forced her to watch what was happening, and instead of taking immediate cover, she ran across the room to see the state of Allan's new cottage on the next property. Did it still have a roof and siding she wondered? A roof yes, the entire siding, no.

Through the large living room window, Sandra looked upwards to see more.

"You could see the trees just bending and going over. One 60-ft. tree fell in front of the cottage and another big one out back, everywhere but on the cottage." From the time they spotted the storm to when it was all said and done, only two to five minutes had elapsed.

"Where we felt frightened was probably three minutes," said Sandra. "It was a terrific force. You wouldn't want to be outside, I don't know what would happen if we were."

The top of their well-hinged and fair-sized Rubbermaid storage bin was found in the woods behind their cottage, nearly a hundred yards away.

* * *

Back at the King cottage, Alison was continuing to share her tornado experiences when she was briefly interrupted by a knock at the door.

"The money's in my wallet, and give them some money for gas, too," Alison said to Brad, who answered the door.

Nearly a year has passed since the tornadoes roared through and the Kings were still paying to get rid of debris and large stumps on their property. Why wouldn't they just keep the wood for campfires? Alison says there was simply too much, mostly massive pieces of pine.

After the young men departed Alison pointed out a black, rectangular space in the corner of their ceiling, approximately one and half feet long by six inches wide.

"You can see the patchwork up there," said Alison. "There was a big piece of a white pine that had snapped off; it was hanging about two feet off the ground inside the cottage."

But compared to their neighbours three doors down, where the cottage was completely destroyed by the storm, the King cottage suffered minor damage. Only the screens were blown in thanks to the open windows.

The scenario was the same at John Summer's cottage, and he believes the open windows were a saviour of sorts.

"I had doors and windows open," said John, "which is what saved our butts. The wind went right through the cottage. If the windows (and doors) were closed they would have blown right through."

On the King property, Alison's car wasn't as fortunate. It was a write-off. In addition, at the rear of the cottage once stood an old garage built by Alison's grandfather. During the storm two very large pines were uprooted by the forceful winds and, as the trees went down, one side of the garage went up.

At the kitchen table Alison looks out towards the water, taking a moment to reflect.

"It was actually amazing because so many of us from this bay were at this party," she says. "So we were all protected from the trees that went down all around us and nobody was hurt. We were kind of in the right place at the wrong time."

What Alison found most interesting was that after the storm, around 10 p.m., they really had no idea of knowing how widespread the damage was. And it was around that time that small beams of flashlights were spotted coming towards their cottage. Arriving on her front porch was a family of six, the Johnsons, who were stranded due to road closures. So the Kings put the family up for the night while neighbours did the same for others in similar situations.

The next morning the Johnsons hitchhiked out and the Kings began to survey the damage. Trying to cross the once-empty lot separating the King and Summer cottages was impossible due to fall debris.

"We had to go down to the beach to get across," says Alison.

After spending the day surveying the damage, the Kings were exhausted, both emotionally and physically, from moving as much debris as they could.

The following morning the Kings awoke to a knock at the door and greeted a familiar face; it was the man whose family had recently spent the night at the King cottage. He had returned, with tools in hand.

The man was Brad Johnson, who owns Porteco, a timber frame building

Dennis and Sandra Lane may have lost many trees at their Maple Lake cottage but at least these tornado bowls pay proper tribute to their fallen friends.

company based in Dorset.

"He walked in and got up on the roof and repaired the hole where the white pine had gone through," said Alison.

Not only that, but Johnson came back again with heavy equipment and removed a lot of the logs, which he eventually used to build a home in Dorset.

"It was a little fortuitous that this family knocked on our door and ended up helping us with the cleanup," said Alison, smiling. "And the wild amounts of wood certainly aren't cheap to clean up. Even with the wood's value, it would cost more to remove than one could sell."

Rolfe turns broken trees into beautiful bowls

"The neighbours' boat was parked next to our boat; it had blown down (anchor and all)," says Sandra Lane, who estimated a travel distance of 30 yards.

"Yet the broom that sits at the end of their dock to sweep the bird poop was still sitting on the dock," adds her son Allan.

Everyone laughs.

The morning after the storm, little Felix was at first very interested at what he saw but after a while Sandra said his mood changed.

"Then he looked out and said, 'I don't want to see this anymore,'" says Sandra.

Felix wasn't the only one emotionally affected by the tornadoes, but only those who experienced the tornadoes first hand can comprehend the emotions of the young boy.

Clean up has been a long and arduous process for all parties involved. However, the tight knit communities came together like always, and everyone pitched in to help.

Like so many others, the Lanes' road was blocked by downed trees but, thankfully, their neighbour at the end of the lane, Larry VanLeishout, had a tractor and was able to remove the big logs.

"There were about 20 people who came to help clean up," said Allan, "but there was only one chainsaw and Larry's tractor."

The Lanes could only stay for only a couple of days, forced to leave due to no power for their septic system.

"It was kind of fun," says 72-year-old Sandra. "We were really pioneering for a couple of days afterwards."

The Lanes had the majority of their clean up done professionally, which cost approximately $3,000 but not everyone in the neighbourhood could afford, or wanted to pay for, such a service.

So for the now the piles upon piles of brush lining the forest side of Fry Lane will remain. How long they'll remain is unknown but for the time being the piles serve as a constant reminder of Aug. 2, 2006.

* * *

Clean up at the King residence was a little easier — well, maybe not easier but there was a little more help, both manually and mechanically. The Kings remained at their cottage for nine days with no power and friends from the city were very understanding and came to help clean up.

"Yeah, our friends from the city came up, they brought generators, chain saws, coolers of ice, oil and gas mix... All of these people just arrived with food and got to work. It was fantastic!"

John came up with the idea of running a hose to the Kings using a generator to power it so the Kings had the use of their pump.

"It's been a one-year project for everybody, but we're still here!" says John.

Over the years, like most cottagers, (excluding their pets), Alison and her family have developed a love of watching storms come in while safe inside the cottage but things have changed a little since Aug 2 of last year.

"I must admit, I have a new, healthy respect for Mother Nature and I have a little more trepidation when I see black clouds and it's muggy," she said.

But she and her family are more prepared after the experience and the Kings have an emergency plan set out if they something so unfortunate were to happen again.

"I know it was like this everywhere, but it was amazing how everyone pulled together. It was so stressful and depressing on so many levels because I just loved the big pines, it just broke my heart. And it's so hard to know how to thank people who are there for you."

But, through a man with a passion for wood, she would find a way.

Beautiful Disaster

When she was just a little girl, Alison used to play under the pine tree that nearly crushed her cottage. But when she saw a beast of a tree felled by last August's tornado, it was quite the sight for her emotionally.

"It was like a beached whale," she said.

With so many ideas running through her head of what she could do with the wood, it was on a drive to Haliburton that when she spotted Paul Rolfe's sign for wooden bowls. She turned into his driveway.

Rolfe's business, A Treasured Box, which he runs out of his home, is just west of West Guilford. Rolfe, a geology technician by training, worked in construction for 15 years before deciding to try his hand at the world of arts and crafts. About five years ago he tried woodturning.

"I have had three customers who have hired me to make bowls out of the trees that came down from the storm," says Rolfe.

Shortly after the tornadoes, Rolfe called his friends, the Lanes, on Maple Lake.

Sandra says, "His idea was to come over to see if we needed any help. Then he asked what we would think of him taking a chunk of a tree and making some bowls."

"We said, 'sure, we'll buy some bowls from you,'" says Dennis.

In the end they bought three bowls: one for their cottage, one for Allan's cottage, and one for their German friends.

Alison King estimates that the youngest tree down on her property was about 150 years old. They lost about three of them. After Brad Johnson arrived with all of his heavy equipment to remove the trees at no charge, Alison wanted to give Brad, and everyone who helped, a thank-you gift.

Rolfe arrived at their cottage.

"He asked which of the fallen trees was my favourite," said Alison.

It wasn't a hard decision and Rolfe made sure to cut the tree to avoid knots and ensure the proper grain pattern. A chunk of wood approximately 10-12 inches makes one six-inch bowl and Alison bought seven.

For the Lane and King families, one could say cottage life is back to normal, and while the storm took what can not be replaced, the tornado bowls inside cottages around the Haliburton Highlands will always remind people that from disaster comes beauty and from chaos comes clarity.

From his home workshop and business, A Treasured Box, located on Hwy. 118 west of West Guildford, Paul Rolfe gets sprayed with wood chips as he turns a bowl.

Trusting your gut: a tornado story

GREG HOEKSTRA

Staff Reporter

August 2, 2006 is a day that won't soon be forgotten in Haliburton County.

It seems as though everyone has a story to tell about that evening, when three tornadoes and a series of microbursts tore through the region, uprooting countless trees and causing immense property damage to cottages, homes, and vehicles alike.

But, despite widespread devastation and the severity of the storm, miraculously there were very few reported injuries. In fact, one of the worst injuries on record from that day was inflicted upon a 10-year-old boy, Zach, who was out on the Haliburton Forest's canopy tour.

One year after the storm, former canopy tour guide Jason Wigmore sat down with the Echo to retell his – and Zach's – story.

For six straight summers, Kennisis Lake cottager Jason Wigmore had worked as a tour guide at the nearby Haliburton Forest. In many ways the summer of 2006 was no different, with the exception that he was also finishing up his last few credits of teachers' college. It would be his last summer working at the Forest before seeking full-time employment.

On August 2, Wigmore finished his final course and then began the long drive back to Haliburton from Buffalo, where he was studying. Arriving around 3:30 p.m., Wigmore quickly got dressed in his uniform and prepared to take out a group of 12 for a Walk in the Clouds.

"We took the tour out, knowing that some kind of weather was probably coming, but assumed it was just a thunderstorm, which we have protocol for," he says.

For the first few hours everything seemed to go off without a hitch. The group enjoyed much of the tour, including a van ride through the forest, an interpretative hike, a canoe ride, and a "walk in the clouds" along a boardwalk suspended from treetops 20 metres above the forest floor.

Roughly three quarters of the way through the tour, the group stopped to rest and take in the view from a large suspended platform. It was then that they really began to take notice of lightning flashes in the far off hills.

Sensing a storm was about to gust through the area, Wigmore quickly escorted the group of 12 down from the canopy course and walked them towards a storm shelter built for just such a situation. However, as much as he wanted to follow his employer's protocol, Wigmore says the increasing frequency of lightning flashes in the distance prompted him to take a different and unconventional course of action.

"I just had this feeling that something big was coming," he says. "So I told the group our only options were to stay in the shelter or to take the canoes along the shoreline and 'paddle like you've never paddled before' in hopes of making it back to the van."

Hoping to avoid a thunderstorm in a heavily-wooded area, the group decided that paddling for home was the better of the two options. However, with only about 200 yards left to paddle, the

GREG HOEKSTRA/ECHO

On August 2, 2006, Kennisis Lake cottager Jason Wigmore was working as a canopy tour guide at Haliburton Forest when a microburst blew through the area, toppling the canopy tour course, uprooting 140-foot trees and injuring a 10-year-old boy. Wigmore used his gut instinct to guide a group of 12 back to safety.

impending storm closed in on the group, and Wigmore immediately ordered everyone to abandon the canoes on shore.

"Suddenly you could hear this really loud sound, almost like a train," he says. "When we heard that, we immediately started to get out of our canoes, but then when we looked to our right we saw a wall of what we thought was rain coming straight at us. We later realized it was actually balls of hail, and it was coming down almost completely sideways."

In a desperate attempt to shield themselves from pelting hail, the group ran from the shoreline into the thick woods. In the forest, winds continued to howl and 50 feet from the group trees began to topple left and right.

It was then that Wigmore says the group heard a large cracking noise, and looked up only to see that the top of a tree had snapped off and was beginning to swing down in their direction. Before they could move, the giant limb landed directly on the leg of 10-year-old Zach – on vacation with his family from Midland.

Fortunately the tree rolled off Zach's leg, but the sudden impact left the boy writhing in agony.

"So, if you can picture it, now we have hail coming at us sideways, a group of 12, and a young boy screaming in pain."

While the group huddled around the young boy for support, Wigmore began exploring the area in search of the best way for the group to get out of their situation. Unfortunately, he discovered that the group had actually landed their canoes along the southern border of the Forest's property. They were on an unfamiliar stretch of private property with downed trees prohibiting travel.

When he returned to the group, Wigmore says an eerie stillness swept over the area, which he considered to be the "calm in the centre of the storm." With a sense of urgency, Wigmore told the group, "We're not waking back. You're all going to think I'm crazy, but we have to get back in the canoes."

Of course, when they finally docked the canoes, yet another challenge awaited the group – the trail back to the van was completely shrouded by toppled trees and foliage.

"Even for me, who has walked that trail every summer for seven years, I could not tell where that trail was," recalls Wigmore. "There were just trees down everywhere. My only frame of reference between where we were and where the van was parked was the Pelaw River."

After trying unsuccessfully to weave through the maze of downed trees with the injured Zach, the group decided to wade along the riverbank. Since Zach's father, Paul, had recently injured his shoulder in a motorcycle accident, Wigmore did his best to carry Zach back to the van on his shoulder, tearing the cartilage in his right knee somewhere along the way. "Of course, I didn't feel that until the next day, after the adrenaline wore off," he says.

As the group made its way back to base camp in the van, Wigmore says they were all a little thrown off by what they were seeing.

"There was very little indication that anything had happened at all. There was the odd small tree or branch down, but very little indication of anything major," he says. "And back at base camp, which is roughly three miles away, no one really realized the severity of what had just happened. They figured it had just been another thunderstorm."

Knowing that Zach had sustained a serious injury, Wigmore then offered to lead the family back towards Haliburton village so they could seek medical attention at the hospital. However, the group only made it as far as the hamlet of West Guilford – where one of the area's strongest tornadoes had touched down – before being hindered by blocked roads, downed trees and power lines.

Wigmore says that Hydro employees radioed for an ambulance to be dispatched to the area, but the ambulance could only make it as far as the gas station at the southern tip of the village. From there, paramedics had to take a stretcher through the baseball diamond and along a path in the woods that brought them out to a clearing near the general store where Wigmore and the family were stranded.

While Zach and his mother went in the ambulance, Paul and his daughter accompanied Wigmore back to a friend's cottage where they could change into dry clothing and spend the night, in hopes that the roads would be cleared off by morning.

Sure enough, when they awoke early the next day the roads were open for travel. A quick phone call to the hospital confirmed that Zach was safe, though the fallen tree had broken his leg and would require him to be in a cast for at least 12 weeks.

Wigmore wished the family farewell and returned to the Forest to survey the damage. They soon would get a firsthand glimpse at just how bad things really were deep in the forest.

Taking a rescue boat out to the canopy tour, a group of Forest employees was shocked to find that nearly every tree had been flattened by what was either a localized tornado or microburst.

Staying in safe haven would have ended in tragedy

"Out of the whole stand all that was left standing were about 10 or 15 trees. It was just a flattened peninsula," says Wigmore. "That's when it really hit home about what really happened and what we all went through."

Perhaps even more frightening, he says, was the fact that what should have been a safe haven in any other storm was completely flattened – meaning that had they followed protocol that afternoon, rather than gut instinct, this story might have a much more tragic twist than one broken leg.

"That shelter, which according to protocol we should have stayed in, had a large white pine tree right smack through the centre of it. It was left two inches off the ground," he says. "Had we stayed in that shelter I probably wouldn't be sitting here talking today."

Looking back on the tornado one year later, Wigmore is thankful for a lot of things. In particular, he is thankful that he had a "fairly athletic and agile" group with him that afternoon, and one that was willing to trust his instincts in a high-pressure situation.

"Most of them seemed to know the severity of it and trusted that, as their guides, we knew what we were doing," he says. "A few of them were really panicky and somewhat freaking out, and I can still remember when one of them turned to me and asked 'When's the rescue helicopter to get us out of here,'" he adds with a laugh.

"In the end, it was really a mixed bag, depending on what people had been through and their life experience. That group definitely got a rustic experience."

One year later, everything has returned to normal once again. Haliburton Forest has rebuilt its canopy tour, albeit at a different location, and Wigmore says that in his correspondence with Zach's family he has learned that the boy's leg healed well, though he doesn't like to talk, hear about, or relive the incident in any way.

"From what I hear from him he is still pretty traumatized from the whole experience," he says.

Meanwhile, Wigmore – who is now a full-time teacher – is enjoying his first summer off in many years by making good use of his cottage in the Highlands. Though he, too, admits that he hasn't relived last August's tornado in many months, he also says the experience is one he will be able to recall with precision for many years to come.

"Experiencing a storm like that is different than being inside a cottage. Instead of waking up the next morning to see the devastation, you're actually right in the middle of it," he says.

"Until you see it first-hand, you really don't realize what a big event something like that is, and just how lucky we all were. And I guess lucky is really just the best way to describe it. I feel like it just wasn't yet my time to go."

Downed trees across roads in West Guilford prevented Zach – who had his leg broken by a falling tree – from reaching a hospital right away. The paramedics were able to get to him through the park and take him to the hospital. Zach's injury, although bad, paled by what would have happened if the group had stayed in the Haliburton Forest emergency shelter: a giant white pine fell right through the middle of it. This photo of the West Guilford Community Centre shows the extent of the storm damage.

Building codes may be justified after all

WAYNE HUSSEY

Special to the Echo

Most of us, especially seniors like myself, are set in our beliefs and ways.

However, once in a while an earth-shattering event can evoke a change in even the most stubborn. Last year's August 2nd tornado had that effect on me.

Prior to then I believed that building permits and site inspections were at best a nuisance and a cash grab.

Two weeks before the storm, Dysart's municipal building inspectors insisted that the 28-foot high living room wall on my son's new home (near Camp Timberlane and Drag Lake) be reinforced to withstand high winds. My first reaction was, "We're in the bush protected by trees and the prevailing winds are from the west, not the north. Isn't this overkill?"

They persisted, we worked with them to find a solution. We completed the upgrade to their satisfaction.

After the storm, looking at the downed trees in front and the wall still standing, I know that the building would have been lost if not for their persistence. Thanks, Dan Sayers and company!

When you really think about it, these inspections are for our safety and to make certain that contractors and renovators do a quality job.

It's thanks to building permits, site inspectors, and people like Mike Holmes of HGTV and his "Do It Right" slogan that we have better, safer homes. Great job, guys!

A Scouter's storm story

THOMAS BAMFORD

Special to the Echo

It was a hot and humid early day in August. My scout troop was finishing an education program at the Haliburton Forest Wolf Centre when a word of warning was issued. "Watch the sky tonight guys. We've had some really humid days as of late and we are due for a good storm. It will be short but may be pretty wicked," advised Laura, our interpreter.

The warning was not given in vain. Upon our return to our camp at the Haliburton Scout Reserve north of Drag Lake, my troop leaders fortified our shelter.

Later that day the clouds seemed to be moving by faster than usual. First we heard the rain coming. Everyone, no matter where they were, ran for shelter. Then, when everyone was comfortably inside, the rain off the lake started hitting the shelter so hard that when you put your hand against the wall to push it out of the way, you could barely move it.

When we looked outside we saw that the trees were bending over and were about to break! That is when the leaders went into defensive mode. They were yelling at us at the top of their lungs to get under the tables. Their voices were overpowered by the sounds of the snapping trees and the immense winds. When I got under my table I felt one of the legs of the shelter lightly tap my leg before it started to fly off the ground. A tree stopped it in its tracks and crumbled it down.

Suddenly the winds died down and the sounds of a regular thunderstorm filled my ears. It was over in a flash. I got out from under the table and saw in the darkly lit afterglow all the crippled trees around me. My table was outside the remnants of the shelter. Everyone else was inside wondering where I was.

We needed to get to the base camp. The tree which held our telephone connection had fallen over, so the leaders started calling the base camp number with their cell phones. The line was busy and we couldn't get through. So two of our leaders (Scouter Dan and Scouter Andy) crossed the lake in their canoe in the middle of a thunderstorm. When they got there they asked for critical assistance. Two brave young men got on the fastest barge in the reserve and booted it across the lake to our aid.

Thanks to our leaders and those brave young men we got to the base camp and were given the top section of the building to stay in (as well as some exquisite sugar cookies and juice). The next day the leaders were sent back to the campsite to collect our things while we did some activities such as rock climbing. Then we went home safe and sound.

I send a thank you to all who kept us safe.

Thieves hit Essonville cemetery and church

Have you noticed a small metal gate or a load of split cedar rails appearing in your neighbourhood recently? The metal "walk through" gate at the Essonville Cemetery has been stolen. Gone also is a pile of split cedar rails from behind the church.

The Essonville Historic Church committee that has worked so hard and lovingly to restore and preserve this precious place has erected a rail fence in front of the church. The stolen cedar rails were to be used by these volunteers and Highlands East staff to build a matching fence at the cemetery across the road. Now the rails are gone. How sad, how discouraging!

Perhaps the thoughtless thieves will have second thoughts and return the gate and rails some dark night soon. When the attractive Wilberforce sign by Cockle Lake was "removed" a few years ago, saner, sober heads saw that it was quietly returned. Maybe the gate and rails will also miraculously reappear.

The annual Decoration Day Memorial Service will be held at the historic Essonville Church and cemetery on August 19 at 2 p.m. That's the third Sunday of August. Speaker this year will be Ted Morris. Wouldn't it be great if the gate and rails were back before that?

The Loop Troupe was pleased with the receptive audiences that attended the Mother Variations performances on July 27 and 28. Lots of laughs and chuckles in all the right places so it seems bringing it back for a second run was a good idea. What a team effort. Director Gill Stephen co-ordinated the re-assembly of the set and kept everything going smoothly. Dan Linkert had the sound and lights systems in great order. The cast sweated through rehearsals, brushing up on lines and getting back into roles. Thanks to Joan Barton, Vonda MacLennan, Shawn Arscott, Doug Stephen, Valerie French, Darlene Buckingham, Flo Elliott, Paul Hazen and all, the Troupers. Special thanks to Agnews for selling advance tickets and to Jodi Rupnow of Powerful Designs for great poster design and production. All these people made the role of cast Carolyn Barnes (Cindy), Kim Barrett (Shirley) and Hilda Clark (Bubby) so much easier with all their contributions. The Loop Troupe dedicated these performances to the late Ernie Hemphill who contributed so much talent and hilarity to their productions.

The village will be buzzing as August rolls in. The Wilberforce library is having its yard and book sale on Saturday, August 11. They welcome donations for the sale.

Many are preparing for and anticipating all the action at the Wilberforce Agricultural Fair on Friday and Saturday August 10 and 11. The fairgrounds, the horticultural hall (curling rink) and Lloyd Watson Centre will all have fine things to see and do. Kids, get those dogs in shape!

The Highlands East Arts and Crafts Studio tour is on Sat. and Sun. Aug. 11 and 12. Great opportunity to visit the studios and experience the work of selected artists.

The Wilberforce Heritage Guild kicked off a new fund raiser at the Loop Troupe plays this past weekend. Two fine paintings by world-renowned surrealist artist John Young of Toronto are being raffled. These 8"x10" framed acrylic paintings are entitled "Into My Garden" and "Sacred Forest." They were generously donated by Mr. Young and his sister Barb Schram of Wilberforce. Tickets are available from Guild members and friends, at Agnew's Store and at the Outpost Museum. Pick up a ticket while at the Croquet Games and tea this Wednesday August 5. Eleanor Cooper

754-2388

Congratulations to Alex Sisson, son of Martin and Vicki Sisson, who graduated from the University of Toronto with an Honours Bachelor of Arts Degree, majoring in History and English. We wish him well on his time in Japan where he will be teaching English.

Congratulations to Ruth Cooper on the birth of a new grandson, Caleb, born on June 20, 2007 in Atlanta, Ga., to Jonathon and Janice Poole, a brother for Amelia and Benjamin.

Congratulations Bernard Bain upon his retirement at the Haliburton Legion. The event was very well attended as he was toasted and roasted at the party given at Branch 129 on Saturday, July 28. His friends, relatives and many acquaintances turned out to wish him well and celebrate the occasion.

Earl and I attended the fiftieth birthday and retirement party of Rob Thornton, husband of Bonnie Stevens, on July 28, in Bowmanville. We joined the 50 to 60 guests for the surprise event which included a catered buffet and DJ. We were especially happy to see all of Rob and Bonnie's family together: Jason, Tiffany, Madeline and Kenny. It was good to see Bonnie's brother, Gordon Stevens again. Lots of catching up to do on both sides.

Shannon Neville on fiddle and Adrian Martin on keyboard were part of "Serendipity" which performed at "Music by the Gull" on Friday, July 27. People bring lawn chairs and enjoy an hour or so of fine local talent on these Friday events in Minden. This Friday is the exception because of the Highland Yard Race.

Everyone will miss seeing Bernie Bain behind the bar

By the time this column is read the Branch will have celebrated the retirement of one of its longest-serving employees. Bernard Bain has been our bartender at Branch 129 for 30 years and will be leaving to start the next phase of his life. We wish him well and I know our membership and visitors will miss seeing him behind the bar.

It was exciting to hear the announcement at the Friday Meat Draw that all the tickets to his retirement roast had been sold.

Our volunteers did a brisk business in spite of the weather at the Beef on a Bun booth at the Highland Games. We look forward to being included in next year's event. Thanks to all the volunteers for braving the bad weather to help the Branch.

Our Colour Party led by Brian Hambly will be attending the celebrations for the 150th Anniversary of the town of Lindsay. They are expecting 5,000 people to attend and our Branch will be marching proud with many other Legions from Ontario. If you wish to join the Colour Party give Brian a call at 754-3319.

We had enough members present at our July general meeting to form a quorum and conduct our business. This was not possible at the June general meeting. It is imperative that our membership come out to our General Meetings in order for our Branch to conduct its business. The executive is not authorized to make donations from the lottery fund or pay the bills without the consent of the general body.

Please make an effort to come out to the general meetings held on the second Thursday of every month. The July donations were made to the Haliburton Lions Club ($100) and the Highland Games ($500).

The new tables have arrived for our upstairs hall and the Branch would like to thank again the Haliburton County Development Corp. for the grant which made this possible.

Our list of volunteers is dwindling. If you have a few hours a week that you wish to give to your community, please contact any executive member and we can help you fulfil your wish. Our Branch is almost totally run by volunteers and it is a big job.

Remember many hands make light work. Make the call today to put your name on the volunteer list, 457-2571.

Discover Lochlin's flying wonders

Flying insects come in many shapes, sizes and colors! Some we admire as they sit on the end of the dock and some we desperately swat at while we sit on the dock, but very few do we actually know. Join Colin Jones, a biologist with the Ministry of Natural Resources, on August 1 as he introduces us to the vast diversity of these insects and to some basic insect ecology.

The Discovery Day event runs from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at 1126 Warder Rd., in Lochlin.

Becoming familiar with some collection techniques, you will take your newly found skills and explore open fields and wetlands to see what flying wonders inhabit this beautiful area. Register at 286-1521. The cost: adults: $15, children $8 and $30 for families.

In memoriam

In memoriam

To my wife and best friend

Though her face may not be seen among us here today
Her love is felt in all our hearts, She changed along the way

Missing you, Don

My mother kept a garden, a garden of the heart
She planted all the good things that gave my life its start
She turned me to the sunshine and encouraged me to dream
And when the winds and rains came she protected me just enough
She knew I'd stand up strong and tough
Her constant good example always taught me right from wrong,
Markers for my pathway that will last a lifetime long.

Loving you always and forever
Pete, Cathy and Jes
